FORMER NILES YOUTH IS SHOT BY BANDITS DURING S. F. HOLDUP

George Cottrell Victim of Robber's Bullets;
Will Recover.

A former Niles boy, George Cottrell, 25, now a sailor stationed at the navy post at Yerba Buena Island, was shot and seriously wounded last Thursday morning during the holdup of a soft drink parlor by three bandits in San Francisco. Cottrell, who is a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Crane, of Niles, is at present in the Mare Island navy base hospital, where it is said he will recover from his injuries.

The wounded man, who was visited at the hospital on Sunday by his cousins, Raymond and Leiland Crane, accompanied by Richard Davis and Ann Crane, related the story of the shooting in the following manner to the visitors.

A half dozen persons had been in the soft drink parlor at the time of the holdup. The robbers had been seated at a table in the establishment for several hours when suddenly they arose and confronted the customers with drawn guns, ordering them to lie on the floor and remain perfectly still.

According to Cottrell, a command was given by one of the holdup men to empty all the contents of their pockets. In complying with the order, Cottrell's movements were mistaken by one of the bandits as a move for a weapon. Thus he fired two shots at the sailor, the second one striking him in the back and missing his spine only by a quarter of an inch, slightly paralyzing him from the waist down.

The bandits fled instantly after the shooting, but were captured soon afterward by San Francisco police, who drove their car over the curb of a sidewalk and pinned the men against the wall of an apartment from which they were just emerging. The police trailed the three men to the scene of the capture by discovering two of them were taxi drivers and had been driven by another taxi man to the apartment house. They surrendered without a struggle, and were taken to the San Francisco Central Emergency hospital where they were identified as the robbers by Cottrell.

The three men in custody, all of whom are alleged to have previous criminal records, are Nicholas Malcom, alias Nick Malaletkin, 27; Fred Landers, 25; and James Dailey, 25. They have been booked on charges of assault to murder and robbery.

At first reports Cottrell was given little chance to live, but according to the reports of Niles relatives who visited him Sunday, he is resting easily and is expected to be confined to his bed only about ten days. The injury is not expected to leave any permanent effects. The bullet was removed by Mare Island

FORMER DECOTO YOUTH MEMBER U. OF C. DAILY

Reviews to Student Publication.

Orville Blose, a former resident of Decoto and well-known in Niles, is a member of the drama critic's staff on the Daily Californian, daily publication of the associated students at the University of California, where he is attending school.

Blose shows evidence of becoming an able critic, his drama, book, opera and theater reviews often occupying the columns of the student daily. He is a junior at the university.

Blose is a graduate of Washington Union High School, where he was prominent in student activities. He was on the reportorial staff of the Township Register for a time after completing high school. He now lives in Oakland.

FATHER MACAUL ENTERTAINS ON FRIDAY EVENING

A whist party was held Friday night at the home of Rev. J. McCaul, at which a large number of guests were entertained. The first honor of the evening was taken by Mrs. Brunelli, while Judge Salva was the recipient of a pair of hand embroidered pillow cases.

Sixteen tables of whist were in progress throughout the evening. Delicious refreshments were served.

Mrs. Easterday Better After Serious Illness

Mrs. Ida Easterday, who has been seriously ill for the past month, is now recovering and is able to be up. Mrs. Easterday suffered a stroke on August 12, while at lodge meeting, and has been confined to her bed and home ever since. She hopes to be able to be out-of-doors again soon.

Yuba City—Construction of $19,000 National Guard Armory is progressing.

Cottrell is very well-known in Niles and vicinity and has many friends who will be glad to hear he will recover. The sailor spent his entire youth in Niles, being raised by Mr. and Mrs. Crane. He attended the Niles grammar school. Cottrell entered the navy about five years ago. He served four years and re-enlisted in the service last January.

WELFARE BODY HAS MEETING ON FRIDAY AT MRS. THANE'S

A special meeting of the Toyon branch of the Baby Hospital of Alameda county was called by the chairman, Mrs. James R. Whipple, at the home of her mother, Mrs. J. E. Thane, on Friday. John L. Bunker, assistant superintendent of the schools of Alameda county, spoke to the gathering on child welfare.

It was the first meeting of the year for the Toyon branch, which is interested in children's welfare work. Meetings will be held hereafter on every second and fourth Monday in the month. A lovely luncheon was served by the hostess after the meeting. About eight members of the organization were present.

POOLHALL MAN ROBBED AGAIN OF TOBACCO STOCK

Thieves Gain Admittance
By Bending Steel
Grating.

Thieves again entered the pool hall of C. L. Perry late Thursday night or early Friday morning and stole eleven cartons of cigarettes and a number of cigars from the tobacco stand. This was the second time within two weeks that the Perry establishment has been broken into. The perpetrators of the robbery have an inclination toward tobacco, as cigarettes and cigars formed the only loot on both instances.

Entrance to the stand on Thursday night was almost identical to that of the former robbery, three of the slender bars forming the steel grating protecting the store being bent up enough to allow a small person to squeeze under. Perry has no clues as to who the guilty ones are. He locked up his place as usual at 10:30 o'clock Thursday night and returned at his accustomed hour in the morning to find the grating bent and the tobacco goods missing. An attempt also had been made, according to the proprietor, to open the cash register, but was unsuccessful. It was evident from this that the thieves were not skilled in burglary, for the cash register was not locked. Perry is of the opinion that the deed was performed by youngsters because the entry means was too small for a grown person to gain admission.

ANOTHER DEER PARTY BEFORE SEASON CLOSURES

Niles Hunters to Depart for Livermore
Country.

Although the end of the deer hunting season is only a week away, the fleet-footed animals which have already suffered so heavily this year at the hands of local hunters are not yet safe to boldly roam the hills with impunity. For a party of Niles hunters are planning on leaving this week determined to bring in more venison before the season closes on September 15. The Livermore country will be the destination of the local expedition.

Those who will make up the party are Les Murphy, Art Roderick, William Burnell, Romeo Burnell, and Frank Cesari.

Dr. and Mrs. E. C. Grau and family spent the week-end at Gold Beach, in Sierra county, on a fishing trip. They reported the fishing as not being very good, due to windy weather.

Mrs. Ed. L. Rose visited her sister, Mrs. Videll, at San Lorenzo over the week-end.

PROSECUTOR'S POST REWARD OF FORMER LOCAL BOY

Succeed Swartz As District
Attorney of San Mateo County.

The community of Niles will be glad to hear that one of its former youths, Edmund Scott, who lived here several years ago with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Scott, has been recently appointed district attorney of San Mateo county, succeeding the former District Attorney Franklin Swartz, who has been made a judge by order of Governor James Rolph.

The promotion of Scott climaxes a comparatively young but brilliant career for the enterprising lawyer, who is still a young man in years. He spent his early youth in Niles where he graduated from the Niles grammar school. He also is a graduate of Washington Union high school, where he displayed brilliance in his studies. He attended St. Ignatius college, now the College of San Francisco, where he took a course in law. He is also a graduate of Hastings Law school. During his college days Scott won exceptional high honors for his scholastic ability, and was graduated before he was yet of age. It was necessary for him to wait until he became twenty-one before he was allowed to practice law. He set up in business in San Francisco for a time, then went to Redwood City, where he has served as deputy district attorney for some time under Swartz. He had been expecting the promotion for some time.

Scott, who is unmarried, resides at Redwood City with his parents at present. He is the nephew of Mrs. Ida Easterday, of Niles.

Garrity Flowers Win Award at State Fair

After strenuous competition in the gladiolus display at the state fair in Sacramento, the blooms contributed by Charles Garrity, of Niles, and Charles G. Davis, of San Leandro, was awarded first place in the exhibit on the opening day. About thirty flowers were entered, all of which drew the admiration of the spectators.

Thousands of visitors who thronged the fair witnessed the agricultural exhibit of Alameda county, in charge of N. W. Armstrong, executive secretary of the Alameda County Development commission. The Frank Thomas cactus garden, sent up from Decoto, created a great deal of interest and drew hundreds of inquiries.

The Kraft tile works, of Niles, occupied the front of the exhibit with five tons of tile, which also created considerable comment from visitors.

LURE OF LOCAL COMMUNITY TOO MUCH FOR COSTA

THE TIES and attractions of Niles were too much for Tony Costa to withstand, so again his familiar face will be seen in the community. Tony set out a couple of weeks ago with Lisbon, Portugal as his ultimate destination.

But when the traveler had gotten as far as Ogden, Utah, he was overtaken with a wave of homesickness and longing for Niles.

Thinking of the old saying, "a wise man often changes his mind," Tony did not resist the back-to-Niles urge, consequently he is numbered among the Niles residents once more, with plans for future voyages indefinite.

SEVERAL WASH. HIGH GRADUATES AT UNIVERSITY

OWNER OF DEATH PLANE MUST FACE COURT TUESDAY

Manslaughter Is Charge for Operating Without License.

Preliminary examination of Marcel Palin, of San Francisco, said to be the owner of the old "Jenny" airplane which caused the death of two men when it crashed and was destroyed by flames close to Irvington on August 23, will take place before Judge Silva, of Niles, on Tuesday, September 15. Palin was arraigned last week before Justice of the Peace Allen Norris, who sat in the place of Judge Silva, on a charge of manslaughter and conspiracy to violate the state aerial navigation laws.

The death plane was of the type used in training during the war and was said to have been condemned at an Oakland airport. Alleged to have been refused permission from all airports in the state to operate the plane, Palin had it removed to a pasture between Warm Springs and Irvington.

The two men killed when the plane wrecked were Richard Nieman, said to have been a passenger, and Stewart Walburg, of San Francisco, alleged to have been an unlicensed pilot. Walburg is said to have been instructing Nieman how to fly when the stick jammed and the two men met their tragic end.

AVIATOR TO FLY FOR VISIT WITH NILES PARENTS

Lieutenant Overacker To Be Transferred to New Post Soon.

Flying halfway across the continent to visit his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Overacker, of Niles, will be the experience of Lieutenant Charles B. Overacker, of the United States air force, now stationed at Rantoul, Ill., who is expected for a couple of days stay here next week.

Lieutenant Overacker will make a cross country flight, leaving Rantoul on September 9 and coming by way of Fort Sill, Tucson, Arizona. He is expected to arrive at Crissey Field in San Francisco on September 11. Lieutenant Overacker, who was born and raised in this community and who has many friends here, has not visited his parents for two years.

He was granted leave to make this trip because he is soon to be transferred to Panama, where he will be stationed for some time. Lieutenant Overacker has been in the air service for a number of years.

FORD OFFERS $100,000 FOR JUNIOR COLLEGE WITH NILES LOCATION

NON-FIREMEN MUST KEEP OFF TRUCK WHEN FIRE BOUND

Officers for Coming Year
Selected at the Friday Night Meeting.

At the regular meeting of the Niles Fire Department held in Fire Hall on Friday night it was resolved to affix signs on the fire truck to keep all non-firemen from riding to the scene of the fire when the machine is called into action. Heretofore it has been a common occurrence for those who were not regular firemen to leap upon the truck and ride to the conflagration with the firemen, a habit that must be avoided in the future, according to fire officials.

Officers for the coming year were also selected at Friday night's session. Those chosen were Frank Silva, president; C. B. Crane, re-elected treasurer, and Sidney Carr, re-elected secretary.

New Campaign Movement Expected As Result of Proposal.

Possibility that Niles may become the seat of a junior college which would serve students from Washington and Eden townships received additional support last week when William H. Ford, wealthy sand and gravel man, of Niles and San Francisco, before a special meeting of the Toyon branch of the Children's Hospital of Southern Alameda county held at the home of Mrs. J. E. Thane, offered to contribute $100,000 to the undertaking if it would be situated within the local community.

The offer has revived discussion of a question about which there was considerable agitation two years ago. At that time Niles was regarded by leaders of the junior college movement to be the logical location for such an institution, because it is the center of the townships, and students from Hayward, Livermore, and Pleasanton territories could reach here with equal facility. TREADING ON DANGEROUS GROUND

AMERICA IS drifting dangerously near the dole system—a system that is paralyzing individual incentive, not only in England but in distressed countries of continental Europe as well. The present economic situation here is bad, no denying, but not as serious as painted by the pen of pessimism. We have talked so much about hard times, read so much about the pitiable state of our finances, that although our cupboard may be full of wholesome food, we feel the pangs of hunger gnaw at our vitals.

Disciples of Karl Marx and adherents to the later radical program of Communism, are insistent that the state should feed and clothe those who say work cannot be had. True, we cannot sit idly by and see our fellow men go hungry or in rags. But there are other ways of relieving distress. The community chests, the Red Cross, the Salvation Army and individual activity along charitable lines, augmented by a maximum of state and national governmental improvement projects will relieve the situation until the financial skies clear. If we permit a temporary depression in business to inveigle us into adopting even a modified system of doles, this and future generations of Americans will pay a tremendous price for our folly.

The first skirmish in the contest to implant the hateful dole system in California comes in the form of a proposition to levy a one-cent gasoline tax for the relief of unemployment. This is an opening wedge, and friends of government sanity should oppose the move with all the power that is in them. The gasoline tax was enacted into law to remove some of the taxable burden from the harried land owner, whose condition in this state and other states has been most deplorable. The money raised in this manner went toward road building, and relieved by just that much the tax on land for the same purpose. Now the proposal is made to add another cent to the tax and use this money to help those out of work. If this is done, it throws wide open the door to a greater extension of the theory of government that should be shunned by every upstanding citizen of California.

San Francisco also moves along the same line of Socialism. An effort was made last week to

ALVARADO WEEKLY NEWS

CHILDREN CRY FOR IT—

CHILDREN hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and just as harmless as the recipe reads.

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, you should use it to keep the system from clogging.

Castoria is sold in every drugstore; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

FIGHT FOR PHONE SERVICE MAY END WITH STATE BODY

Present Situation Creates Greater Fire Hazard, Says Bendel.

The Decoto Chamber of Commerce plans to carry its appeal for community twenty-four hour continuous telephone service to the state railroad commission if an understanding cannot be obtained with the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph company soon.

Under the present arrangements local telephone service can only be obtained when the store in which the telephone exchange is located is open for business. This creates a deplorable situation, according to Roland Bendel, secretary of the local chamber of commerce and chief of the fire department, who says that news of night fires cannot be communicated to the fire department by phone, but residents within the fire district must leave their homes and sound the alarm in the center of the business district. The delay occasioned by this procedure often causes a great deal more damage to property threatened by a blaze than would be the case if the alarm was given sooner.

divert $700,000 of Hetch Hetchy bond money into creating jobs for the idle. The city engineer has, at least temporarily blocked the scheme, but other plans along the same line are maturing. A rather considerable levy on property is proposed for this purpose, and a new idea in American political economy may win. It if does win, no man may know to what extremes the doctrines of decaying Europe may be transplanted to the unpolluted soil of America.

The thing for sane men and women to do today is to keep their heads. Conditions are bad, but far from serious. The bottom has been reached and the country is slowly recovering. Conditions throughout the world have reached the nadir of despair, and are mending. Twenty-four months from now the depression of today will be history. People mill around like a lot of cattle in a stampede. Their present action seems to be motivated by the assumption that never before has the United States gone through a period like the present—the world for the first time groaning under a universal slowing up of commercial activities. How childish! The present condition will pass. It is bad enough for us to suffer now the anguish of hard times, without foisting on this age and ages to come, in America, the damnable dole system, and create a permanent pauper class here, where, under the old order of things human beings were upstanding, proud, courageous, self-reliant—in other words true sons of the New World and a new order of things where the door of opportunity always swung inward.

MAYOR WALKER, of New York, must be a bitter pill for the average citizen of that great city. Strutting about the world wise-cracking serious matters, ridiculing the law of America, violating that law, and generally making a consummate ass of himself, we would think even cosmopolitan New York would yank him out of office with a recall.

TOO MUCH PAID FOR PAVEMENTS SURVEY REVEALS

A study of comparative pavement and street improvement costs released recently by the California Taxpayers' association revealed that:

"California property owners are paying enormous and unnecessary sums for patented pavements. With equal standards of construction, the unpavemented pavements are exactly as good and cost a great deal less than the patented types.

"Investigation shows that the patented pavements cost about five cents more per square foot than equal unpavemented types, and it is also found that the other items of improvements, such as grading, curb and sidewalk, average considerably higher when combined with patented pavements."

Examine hold-down clips on the battery frequently. A loose battery may cause the ground wire to break, thereby disabling the car.

Women and Children Escape Injury; Local Auto Damaged.

One man was injured and two women and several children narrowly escaped being hurt about a mile on this side of Hayward Sunday night when a car driven by Pete Paniagua, of Decoto, crashed into the rear of a light truck, driven by Henry Feliciano, of Oakland. The car driven by Paniagua belonged to Ed Rose, Niles garage man, and had been taken from the Rose garage in Decoto. It was brought to Niles Sunday night in a badly damaged condition.

According to the injured man, he ran out of gas and was alighting from the truck when it was struck by the other machine.

WAGON WRECKED WHEN STRUCK BY OAKLAND AUTO

No Injuries in Accident
Near Innes-Cloverdale Dairy.

The wagon of A. O. Maciel was completely demolished near the Innes-Cloverdale dairy, at Centerville, last week when a car said to be driven by Thorwald Brown, Jr., of Oakland, ran into the rear of it, throwing Maciel, the driver, about fifty feet from the wreck. No one was injured, however, the wagon driver only being slightly bruised and shaken up.

Brown is alleged to have been driving at a fast rate of speed when he struck the back of the wagon.

A meeting of the Centerville troop of Boy Scouts was held last Friday, after which the members enjoyed a swimming party at the Piedmont Baths in Oakland under the leadership of Pete Souza, assistant scoutmaster, and Glen Trout, junior assistant scoutmaster. The local troop started off its activities for the coming year with eleven members, eight of whom are first class scouts. An attempt to increase the membership will be made later.

SENIORS WILL BATTLE REST OF SCHOOL TEAM ON FRIDAY AFTERNOON

Squad Practicing Daily In Preparation for the League Opening.

Washington high school students may have enjoyed three days respite from their studies this week, but in spite of the holidays there was no rest for Coach Regli's aspiring gridironists, who are undergoing daily the strenuous grind of intensive football practice under the stern and relentless tutelage of their mentor who is busily engaged in whipping his men into shape for the rapidly approaching Southern Alameda County Athletic League opening. If the squad is not in fine fettle by the time of the opening game it will be no fault of the coach who believes in hard work as the most efficient method of attaining a winning football team.

On Friday afternoon the result of three weeks of active practice will be put to test when the seniors battle on the high school grounds with the rest of the school in what promises to be a red-hot engagement. The losers are obliged to stake the winners to a bean feed, and although the seniors have consumed free beans at their rival's expense for the last four years and are confident of enjoying another repast of the gratis nature this year, the juniors and others are desperately resolved to eat beans at someone else's expense for once.

The Solemn senior aggregation has the advantage in weight and experience, but their opponents will be fighting an underdog's battle and may unleash such a ferocious attack that the contents of the dope bucket will be scattered to the four corners of the field in the wake of a determined rest-of-the school eleven.

Whatever the outcome, Coach Regli will take advantage of this opportunity to select the huskies who will make up the starting lineup in the contest with the alumni on the following week. Thus a battle royal is assured in Friday's game for every player in the fracas will be exhibiting all his wares in an effort to be numbered on the first string.

The seniors will select their lineup from the following men: Logan, Aust, Weed, Pontes, Kato, Knobles, Fife, Trout, Dick, Goularte, Vaughn, Nagawora and Souza.

The rest of the school will draw its players from the following: Booras, Geib, Carr, R. Logan, Salvadorina, Harold, A. Mederos, G. Mederos, J. Mederos, Frontz, J. Silva, J. J. Silva and Townsend.

Bank of America

Clay, shaped
on an Indian's thigh

MOLDED on the thighs of Indian workers and baked over charcoal fires, much of the original roofing tile on California's missions is well preserved after 150 years!

Modern builders, too, use tile and brick in many forms for permanence and beauty.

But the tedious methods of the Padres have given way to ingenious molds, special machinery and white-hot kilns.

And now 5,000 Californians are engaged in producing 30 million dollars' worth of clay products yearly.

This industry finds Bank of America's statewide service particularly adapted to its needs.

Large concerns simplify the handling of payrolls by depositing funds at branches near their plants.

After selected clays are mined and blended, weeks may elapse before finished products are ready for sale. Funds advanced by this Bank aid in financing production and distribution.

Another appreciated service is the assistance of branch managers in bringing about friendly business contacts throughout the state.

The same advantages that have led 5 of the 8 largest clay products manufacturers in California to choose this Bank, are available to you—through a convenient Bank of America branch in your community.

Street Dance Is Complete Success Saturday Night

Junior Chamber of Commerce Makes $175 on Affair

Success! That's what members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce Pleasanton, think of their street dance last Saturday night. And that's what is was.

In spite of the heavy expense church is that there is one place where he can find parking space.

A man went in a lunch room; Said he: "I've got the cash; So give me everything you've got. And the waiter gave him hash."

"Night shirts are coming back in vogue," Friend Andy Greve confesses. But perhaps the folks he sells 'em to wear them for evening dresses.

There was a fraud, whose name was Maud; She had no appetite. But she cleaned the bone, when all alone—

In the pantry, out of sight. Daughter—"But, Dad, don't you believe that two can live as cheaply as one?"

Father—"I certainly do. Right now your mother and I are living as cheaply as you."—Life.

undergone by the men they realized a profit in excess of $175 on the affair. There were close to 250 tickets sold for the dance and it is estimated that approximately 2,500 people were in Pleasanton during the course of the evening to enjoy the parade and concessions, and to watch the dancing.

Many citizens declare that never in the history of the town has such a crowd been in Pleasanton. This one fact alone should be a feather in the cap of the young civic organization.

The parade, starting at Main and St. John streets, was led by the Amador Valley high school band, with Harry Tripp directing. The chamber's mascot, Billy, followed behind the band, riding in state in a baby carriage with motive power furnished by Kenneth Cake. Billy is a cocky Rhode Island Red rooster.

Next in line was President Andrew M. Greve in the regal carriage, a two-wheeled cart drawn by a massive plow-horse, which was piloted by jockey Ed Orloff.

Another feature of the parade was Vanilla, the pig, personally escorted by Jack Bullene. Following him was Robert Cope in his Sunday rompers and riding on his favorite velocipede.

Possibly the most hilarity was caused by Buford Hall's conception of "Pleasanton's Municipal Swimming Pool", a bath tub on a truck.

The main body of the chamber of commerce members marched in beach and other varieties of pajamas.

A band concert by the high school band on the corner of Neal and Main streets followed the parade. Several well-known numbers were played by the band and were well received by the crowd.

Dancing on Neal street started about nine-thirty and lasted till one o'clock. The music from the orchestra was exceptionally good and entirely suited the occasion.

Although practically every member of the civic body worked himself ragged in preparation for the dance, every one feels well repaid for the effort expended.

The organization feels that special acknowledgement should be given members of the advertising, sign and art committees for their contributions to the success of the dance.

PLEASANTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL TO PRESENT OPERETTA IN NOVEMBER

EXPIRED DRIVING LICENSES MUST BE RENEWED SOON

Many Licenses Returned Because of Improper Applications.

In an effort to clear up misapprehensions concerning operators licenses, the Bureau of Drivers Licenses of the California Highway Patrol issued a statement to the effect that licenses issued between January 1, 1927 and August 14, 1929 are marked good until revoked and need not be renewed at this time.

However, licenses issued on or after August 14, 1929, may have to be renewed. Drivers were advised to look at the bottom of the card to determine the expiration date. Applications for renewal should be filed about ten days prior to expiration.

Applications for renewal must be made on the regulation form issued by the Department of Motor Vehicles.

These may be obtained at any branch office of the Department of Motor Vehicles, and any California Highway Patrol office or any authorized examining agency.

The bureau said hundreds of license cards had been forwarded to it for renewal and that these would have to be returned because they were not accompanied by the proper application.

BANDITS ROB TWO LIVERMORE BOYS NEAR PLEASANTON

A holdup was staged near Pleasanton early Sunday morning when two bandits in an auto forced the car of Charles Eberly, 17, and George Robbins, 18, Livermore boys, off the road between Castlewood Country club and Dublin, and robbed the youths of two wrist watches and the distributor cap of their car, the latter being taken so the victims would be unable to use the machine to notify the authorities.

During the robbery one of the holdup men remained in the car while the other obtained the loot from the badly frightened victims, who were unable to give any clear description of their assailants or to furnish the license number of their car. After the bandits left, Eberly and Robbins went several miles on foot to the home of Robert Miller and reported the crime.

Constable Al Vervais, who was notified, maintained a close watch on the highway for several hours, but was unsuccessful in sighting a car of the description of the one used by the robbers.

ACID STOMACH

EXCESS acid is the common cause of indigestion. It results in pain and sourness about two hours after eating. The quick corrective is an alkali which neutralizes acid. The best corrective is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained standard with physicians in the 50 years since its invention.
One spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia neutralizes instantly many times its volume in acid. Harmless, and tasteless, and yet its action is quick. You will never rely on crude methods, once you learn how quickly this method acts.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—At a public dance Martin Forbes, Chicago newspaper man, is pleasantly attracted by one of the girl dancers. He "cuts in" on her partner, a man whose name he learns later is Max Lewis, and whom he instinctively dislikes. The girl tells him her name is "Rhoda White." He overhears a conversation between Lewis and an unknown woman which he realizes concerns Rhoda. Sensing a good newspaper story, he informs the girl of "Rhoda White," which, judging from the talk he overheard, he is convinced is the girl's real name. She refuses to deny or admit it.

CHAPTER II.—That night Rhoda finds the advertisement. The sight of her discarded name (Martin was right) recalls her childhood in a California town. Her mother dead, she is happy with her father, professor in a small university, until misfortune comes. Associated with the blow is her uncle, William Royce, who becomes in her childish mind an "ogre." Her father brings her to Chicago, where he is engaged in some mysterious work. Rhoda, by chance, learns lip-reading and afterward, stenography. When she is sixteen her father dies suddenly, vainly trying to give her a message about "papers" in a trunk. She has some money, and after his death, fearing she will be claimed by her uncle, she changes her name to "White" and becomes a stenographer in the newspaper office where Forbes is working. She is living with a fellow worker, "Babe" Jennings. Babe, who had been at the dance the night before, tells her Lewis had asked her if Rhoda's real name was not McFarland.

CHAPTER III.—Next day Martin has supper with Rhoda and Babe. He is told the girl's apartment has been broken into and $300 Rhoda had laid away, is stolen. Martin has learned that the mysterious "C. J." of the advertisement is Charles J. Forster, uncle of Max Lewis, and living at the Worcester hotel. The girl admits her name is McFarland, but tells Martin little else of her history. A mysterious "Claire Cleveland" asks Rhoda for an interview.

was safely checked.

Martin slipped out of his cab and followed the chauffeur boldly up to the ticket window and stood at his elbow while the man bought a ticket and a lower berth, the number of which Martin noted, to New York on the Pennsylvania limited that afternoon. He returned as inconspicuously as he could to his own taxi. The other cab had already started down the ramp.

At a safe distance Martin followed and saw Rhoda's little hat trunk checked, saw Max drive away—unchecked, saw him—without, no doubt, what was left of her three hundred dollars in his pocket. Those identical twenty-dollar bills that Martin had seen paid for the ticket had been very likely a part of the board in her bureau drawer. And he had stood looking on and not done a mortal thing! Well, what could he have done? What could he do now?

One thing he'd better do, without loss of time, was to pay off his taxi while he could. He'd left the paper, in his haste this noon, without stopping to get some money that he needed. After he'd paid the sum the meter had been adding up so industriously, and tipped the driver he had just sixty cents left—and you could have bought him, as he stood at the curb watching the cab drive away, for just about that.

The obvious duty before him was to telephone Rhoda at the studio and tell her what he had seen happen. The only plan in his mind was that he and Rhoda go around together to the city hall and swear out a warrant for Lewis' arrest, along with a writ of replevin for the trunk, and then be on hand with a plain-clothes man when Lewis came to the station to take the train. There was time enough—except for the one fact that Rhoda herself would veto the plan.

He hadn't the faintest doubt of that. He remembered how she'd looked last night when he had been telling her about the "mogues"; they dug into that only, he had said, when something in the current news called for a reference to it. He didn't know—he'd deliberately avoided trying to find out—what file it was she was afraid might be looked into nor, exactly, what sort of secret it contained, but he remembered the deep earnestness in her voice when she'd begged him not to try to find out any more than she had told him and not to do anything that might change the life she'd been so happy in during the past two years.

He had been drifting aimlessly along the street in the general direction of his newspaper office, though he had no conscious reason for going back there, and presently he found himself standing outside a little movie theater, staring in a sort of trance at the lurid poster on its billboard. It represented the so-called eternal triangle, a guilty pair surprised by the man's virtuous wife. She was defending the sanctity of the hearth with a small revolver and you could see from the way they cowered before her that they recognized the cogency of her argument. She had the same colored hair as Claire Cleveland—and a little of her looks, too.

Martin's abstraction grew deeper and deeper. The girl in the cage cast sharp little glances his way and wondered whether she hadn't better have his move on. But before she came to this decision he came to one of his own. He looked at his watch and went off to the nearest drug store to telephone to Claire.

CHAPTER VII

How the Plot Worked Out. THE simple, but really rather thrilling one-act play which had its only performance at a few minutes past five that afternoon in the concourse of the Union station, paid no royalties to the stark screen drama which was being exposed six times daily in the little movie theater.

The theft of that plot was the only crime that Martin had to commit that day. Strictly speaking there was no audience, for Martin did not dare come close enough to hear the lines, and Babe Jennings, who heard everything, was herself one of the important actors. Babe had undertaken the part, though at short notice, with enthusiasm, once she'd convinced herself that Martin had not gone suddenly mad and after she had got the main lines of the scenario through her head. She had dashed out to the studio in a taxi—all expenses were guaranteed by Martin—and, thinking goodness that Rhoda wasn't there to have his messages passed on to her, made a toilet as much like a million dollars as her street things ran to.

Her major respensibilities were calculated for the evening, of course, but even in her lesser glory she looked good to Max Lewis when he caught sight of her in the station—good enough to be going to Hollywood. He told her that while he sentimentally prolonged their handshake.

Her answer to this remark about Hollywood was that she was headed for a better place than that. She was starting off on the limited to the big town. She burst into raptures about her trip. "What are you looking so funny about?" she concluded, closing in on her victim. "Are you going to hate to see me as much as that?" "I'm not going to lose you at all," Max told her. "That's the joke. I'm going to New York on the limited, myself. What car are you in? Let's see your ticket."

Babe cheerfully gave credit to Martin that this property was in place. She'd never have thought of the detail herself. She opened her handbag and got out one of those railway envelopes that they enclose tickets in. It had some stuffing in it, too. But it didn't require to be opened, for on the face of it was written in indelible pencil, "Pennsylvania Limited—5:30—Car 408, Lower 10."

She held it out for him to see without, however, letting go of it. "Let's see yours," she said excitedly.

He got a similar envelope out of his breast pocket, but it had no car and berth numbers written on it and he had to get out his pullman tickets for a look. She saw that he had a trunk check in the envelope.

"Why, Max," she cried, with a squeal of excitement, "we're in the same car! Look—408! Can you beat it?"

"I'll tell the world you can't," he proclaimed enthusiastically. "Look here, Babe, what do you say? Can I swap my lower for the upper in your section?" "Well," she told him judicially, "you never can tell till you try."

Out of a corner of her eye Babe thought she saw where a woman stood watching them. "Max," she said, sharp and low, "is that your wife looking at us?"

"Wife!" he echoed. "Say, Babe, where do you get that stuff?" But he looked, and she, looking up at him, saw his face drain to the color of an uncooked pie. The woman swept down upon them and stood glaring from one to the other.

"Babe," eh? she said with a ferocious grin. "I thought so."

She didn't say it very loud, though. Evidently she didn't care about attracting a crowd, herself. "You yellow dog!" she went on to address Max. "Trying to double cross me, were you, and get away with a skirt? Well, you aren't smart enough, see? Give me the check of that trunk!"

"I tell you there wasn't any trunk," he asserted frantically. "I went to find it and I couldn't. It wasn't there."

"Look here," Babe struck in. "I've had enough of this. Sorry to get you in dutch, Max. Good-by."

She made as if to move off toward the gate, then darted back to him, crowding in front of the woman as she did so.

"Gosh," she panted, "I almost forgot! Give me my ticket!"

He swallowed hard and said, "Your ticket?"

She flickered a wink at him. "Don't you remember? I gave it to you when you checked my trunk. Why, you've got it right in your hand."

He opened his dull eyes wide, and if she hadn't been too excited she'd have laughed outright at the mixture of the despair in them of a sudden unbelievable hope.

He gave her the envelope without a word, and she, without another glance at either of the pair, scurried like a rabbit into the crowd around the gate.

Just before she got to the gate-man she slipped aside, and in another section Martin was hugging her.

"Gosh, Babe, you're a peach!" he said.

But if they were to keep Rhoda's trunk from taking an unnecessary and perhaps embarrassing trip to New York there wasn't any time to waste on compliments. "Wait right here," he told her, when she had given him Max's ticket and the precious trunk check, and darted off to find the baggage master.

"I want to get a trunk off the limited," he panted out to that official at the end of the sprint. "The young lady's changed her mind and isn't going."

In less than ten minutes the hat trunk with its gummed-down lid hove in sight, having a ride all by itself on a little electric platform truck. They wouldn't surrender it to Martin, though. It would have to be unlocked first and the contents identified. He was glad he hadn't told them it was his trunk. The young lady who had changed her mind had been a useful invention. He'd bring Rhoda round to get it in the morning.

He found Babe getting annoyed and under the impression that she'd been unwarrantably abandoned, so to pacify her he borrowed five dollars of her and took her into the station restaurant for food. His idea of the meal had been afternoon tea, but it turned out a good deal like a dinner. They had a telephone instrument brought to the table so that they could call up and tell Rhoda the good news, but it seemed she wasn't there to hear it.

"It's funny," Martin commented uneasily. "Isn't she usually home by this time? It's after six. You don't suppose anything's happened to her, do you?"

"Oh, don't be an old hen!" Babe admonished him. "What would have happened to her?" All the same he could see she was as uneasy as he was. They wasted no time about paying their bill and getting a taxi.

The studio was dark when Babe unlocked the door, and their calls evoked no response.

"Something has happened to her," Martin said, with sober conviction. But the telephone rang just then and enabled Babe to say as she darted across the room to answer it, "Silly, there she is now. Turn on the light, will you? It's right by the door."

"Hello!" he heard Babe saying as he fumbled with the switch. "Is that you, Red? Well, what's the matter with your voice? I can't hear you. Yes, Martin's right here. Do you want to talk to him?"

Before she could take the receiver from Babe's hand he heard her say, "Red, what is it? What's the matter? Where are you, anyhow?" And by the time he had crowded into her place, the thread of communication had been broken. "Number, please?" the operator said when he rattled the hook. She couldn't tell where the call they had lost had come from.

CHAPTER VIII

The Spider. IT HAD been the mere momentum of pursuit rather than any consciously adopted plan that had caused Rhoda to dismiss her taxi and follow Claire Cleveland into the Worcester hotel. She wasn't more than a minute or two behind her and what she expected, as far as she'd clearly expected anything, had been to see Claire at the desk inquiring for Mr. Forster.

Claire was nowhere to be seen. Very likely she hadn't had to ask at the desk but had ridden straight up in one of the elevators. Having lost contact with her quarry, Rhoda sat down in one of the massive armchairs in the lobby to think things out a little.

What ground had she for assuming that Claire had come here to see Forster? Well, it was quite reasonable when you considered it. Out of the whole tissue of lies Claire had told at lunch the one emergent truth had been the genuineness of her hatred of Forster and her belief that he hated her.

He might be, Rhoda perceived, just as unpleasant a person as Claire had painted him, or he might be perfectly benevolent, a potential friend. The advertisement in the paper, that Rhoda would learn something to her advantage by applying to him, might be true. He couldn't be dangerous—not physically dangerous—if he couldn't even walk without the aid of two canes.

And if he was the man who had brought her and Babe downtown this morning, as she didn't doubt he was, he now knew where she worked if not where she lived; and this meant she couldn't avoid him unless she moved out of the studio and got a new job. If she was going to see him, what better strategic opportunity could she have for the visit than while Claire was there quarreling with him?

She started across the lobby toward the desk to ask if Mr. C. J. Forster lived there. She needed actually go up to Mr. Forster's apartment unless she wanted to. An inquiry at the desk wouldn't commit her to anything.

But, in the strangest way, it did. The clerk didn't directly answer her question, whether Mr. C. J. Forster lived there or not. He asked for her name instead. But the moment she gave it (as Rhoda White) his manner became alert and deferential.

"Oh, yes, Miss White," he said, and nodded to a bell-boy.

His manner so strangely suggested that he knew all about her and had been eagerly awaiting her arrival, both manifest impossibilities, that she felt like backing away and saying it was all a mistake. She was fairly amazed and faintly frightened, but more than either she was curious to follow the adventure through and see what happened. The clerk had probably mixed her up with some one else. Anyhow, Mr. Forster must be a pretty important person in this hotel to evoke a zeal like that, even though it was mistaken.

The bell-boy, on getting instructions, conducted her over to the elevators. "Right up," he said to the elevator boy, "all the way." The bell-boy followed her in and the car ran all the way to the twenty-fourth floor, regardless of signals.

In the mixture of Rhoda's emotions the element of fear gained a little at the expense of amusement. She began to feel that she'd started something she might not be able to stop.

The twenty-fourth floor appeared to be the topmost. There were red "Down" lights just over all the elevator doors. It didn't appear to be a regular hotel floor, either, at least not the whole of it, for the broad corridor was cut off by a transverse partition of oak and ground glass, as in an office building. The bell-boy went over and pressed the bell button beside a solid door which had no legend nor numerals whatever upon its panel. There was no immediate response.

"Where are you taking me?" Rhoda asked, trying to hide her nervousness.

He seemed surprised at the question. "Mr. Forster doesn't come down to his office much," he said.

He paused just outside the door for a sharp, faintly puzzled look at her, as if he'd expected his appearance to produce some sensation that hadn't come off. Then he gave way what had been in his mind by saying, "We've already met today, you see."

"Yes," she answered, a little vaguely, "I know."

The puzzle that had again come up sharply in her own mind was why he should have taken her here for granted. She couldn't talk to him, though, during his slow, painful progress across the room toward the big chair she'd assumed was his. After he was seated he indicated the chair at the end of the desk, facing the imitation fire, as the one he wanted her to take. Then he said to his attendant, "That's all; you needn't wait. I shan't want you until I ring."

Was it pure imagination on her part, or had he given that order as if he meant something special by it?

The man's going was noiseless, and since Forster didn't immediately speak to her after he'd gone out it seemed almost as if he were waiting for something. The intensity of the silence again became noticeable and frightened her a little. He may have observed this, for what he said was, in a low, husky voice, "I'm very sensitive to sound—don't like sudden noises or loud voices. I've got this room practically sound-proof. That's a fact; ceiling up there, though you wouldn't know it. I suppose you've been wondering why I sent for you?"

So he'd sent for her, had he? Most likely he'd left a message of some sort at the paper which she'd have received if she'd gone back to work this afternoon. That pretty well disposed of her misgivings that she'd been lured into a trap. If he'd contemplated anything ugly or dangerous, like detaining her against her will, he wouldn't openly have summoned her to his apartment. He thought she'd come in answer to his summons. Well, it wouldn't do any harm for the present to let him go on thinking so. So her answer was merely a hesitating admission that she had wondered what he wanted of her.

He seemed a little put out by the way she phrased it. "I don't directly."

His manner remained perfectly civil as he led her out of the elevator and ushered her across a broad hall into a room, where he asked her if she would mind waiting a few minutes. Mr. Forster, she said, would see her directly. If the jaws of some trap were closing upon her she wasn't meant to be aware of them yet.

He closed after him as he went out the door they had come in by and she noted in her first panicky glance about the room that its other doors were closed also. There was complete silence.

She checked her impulse to flight with the reflection that it wouldn't do any good. How had it happened? How could they have known she'd come here when she had only turned into the hotel on the spur of the moment, in pursuit of Claire. She'd never even heard of C. J. Forster until Martin had told her about him last night. Her notion that the hotel clerk and all the rest of them had mistaken her for some one else would no longer serve as an explanation. The man in the blue serge suit must have recognized her, though his stiff face had not betrayed the fact. It had been as Mr. Forster's agent that he had come to the studio last night to see whether she lived there. It had been on the strength of his report that Mr. Forster himself in his limousine had followed her and Babe this morning, offered them the lift Babe had so gladly accepted, and incidentally, found out where they worked. That seemed to hang together.

It was a queer sort of room she was in—large, well proportioned, with a high barrel-vaulted ceiling, beautifully but rather heterogeneously furnished, partly as a drawing room and partly as an office, since there was an enormous flat-topped desk, bare except for a bronze bust of Napoleon, in the middle of it. What was it that made the place seem so queer? Why, there wasn't a window in the whole room!

The early twilight of a cloudy autumn afternoon was already closing in, which might be why she hadn't noticed the absence of daylight in the room when she first came in. But was that the only reason? Probably not. There were pictures all around the walls, big, handsome oil paintings regularly spaced, all of them heavily framed and in shadow boxes with a special light over each, and they broke up the walls more or less as windows would.

The biggest of them all was above the fireplace down at the end of the room. It was a landscape which Rhoda decided looked as if it had been painted from stage scenery rather than from nature itself. The thing that held Rhoda's interest down at that end of the room was the fire that was blazing in the grate just before it. It was an unusually picturesque fire, with its leaping flames, and Rhoda stared at it a full half-minute wondering why she didn't hear it purr or crackle before she discovered that it wasn't a fire at all. It was a highly ingenious electrical counterfeit and must have cost a lot of money. No doubt Mr. Forster was correspondingly proud of it, though why, she wondered, was the chair that was obviously his placed on the wrong side of his desk, not where he could watch the leaping artificial flames, but with his back to them?

The door opened and Mr. Forster, supported by one of his canes and on the arm of the man in the blue serge suit, came into the room.

He paused just outside the door for a sharp, faintly puzzled look at her, as if he'd expected his appearance to produce some sensation that hadn't come off. Then he gave way what had been in his mind by saying, "We've already met today, you see."

"Yes," she answered, a little vaguely, "I know."

The puzzle that had again come up sharply in her own mind was why he should have taken her here for granted. She couldn't talk to him, though, during his slow, painful progress across the room toward the big chair she'd assumed was his. After he was seated he indicated the chair at the end of the desk, facing the imitation fire, as the one he wanted her to take. Then he said to his attendant, "That's all; you needn't wait. I shan't want you until I ring."

Was it pure imagination on her part, or had he given that order as if he meant something special by it?

The man's going was noiseless, and since Forster didn't immediately speak to her after he'd gone out it seemed almost as if he were waiting for something. The intensity of the silence again became noticeable and frightened her a little. He may have observed this, for what he said was, in a low, husky voice, "I'm very sensitive to sound—don't like sudden noises or loud voices. I've got this room practically sound-proof. That's a fact; ceiling up there, though you wouldn't know it. I suppose you've been wondering why I sent for you?"

So he'd sent for her, had he? Most likely he'd left a message of some sort at the paper which she'd have received if she'd gone back to work this afternoon. That pretty well disposed of her misgivings that she'd been lured into a trap. If he'd contemplated anything ugly or dangerous, like detaining her against her will, he wouldn't openly have summoned her to his apartment. He thought she'd come in answer to his summons. Well, it wouldn't do any harm for the present to let him go on thinking so. So her answer was merely a hesitating admission that she had wondered what he wanted of her.

He seemed a little put out by the way she phrased it. "I don't want anything of you at all," he answered her earnestly. "The only thing I want is to do something for you. This is going to be the best thing you ever did, coming to see me. Think now. Didn't your father ever tell you anything about me?"

That was the connection, then. A part, at least, of what Claire had been telling her at lunch was true. She answered with cautious vagueness, "I don't know. He may have."

"Well, of course," he said, "you were a pretty small girl when I hired him. I knew about you, though. I even saw you a few times out walking with him. I remember your red hair. That's how I recognized you this morning, and I'm glad I found you at last. There have been times when I was about ready to give it up."

"Why," she asked, "were you so anxious to find me?"

"Why?" he echoed. "Of course I wanted to find you. I'd never have lost you if I hadn't been sick myself when your father died. I was a mighty good friend to your father. You might say I was the only one he had. He was a fine man. Smart, too, there's no denying that. Only not practical, and smartness don't get you anywhere without that."

"But what I want to tell you is that you've found a friend, that's the long and short of it. I'm an old man, old enough to be your grandfather, and I'm still an old bachelor without chick or child of my own. So I want you should feel you can come to me with any of your troubles. Ask me for anything you want—within reason, that is."

"I'll give you a better job than you've got down there with the newspaper, where you'd get more money and wouldn't have to work so hard. You could come here and do secretarial work for me. Settle down and live right here, too. I mean that. You can go home and pack your trunks and move in here this afternoon. The fact is, it would suit me if you did that very thing."

Rhoda had to admit to herself that this was, intrinsically, a good plausible explanation of his search for her. She had, as it proceeded, found herself wondering why she wasn't believing a word of it. She had known nothing of the nature of her father's actual labors, but she did know the passion that had inspired them and the hope of sudden great fortune that had still been burning in him the very night he died. He begged the doctor for enough of the drug to keep him going a few hours more. Those memories couldn't be reconciled with the sort of job this man was talking about. Why was he trying to make it look like that? Why had he gone out of his way to lie about it? That was the question in her mind when he wound up his speech, with the suggestion that she pack up her trunks and move in to this palatial apartment of his this very afternoon—and the word trunk struck a spark from it.

"It may be," Claire had said at lunch, in discussing Forster's reason for advertising for her, "that he thinks you've got some paper of your father's that he wants." Had Rhoda's father been as near success the night he died as he believed he was? That would account for Forster's lying about his job, for his belittling it all he could.

There was a paper, then, and Forster knew it and had been trying for nobody knew how long to get it. But Claire knew about it, too, and Claire had found her first. Claire's scheme for getting the paper had failed, probably through the treachery of her confederate, Max.

But Forster hadn't got it either, or he wouldn't be sitting there now telling her how kind he meant to be to her, urging her to go home and pack her trunks and come and have her home with him.

She looked up at him now and found him staring at her with a look of consternation.

"What's got into you?" he asked. "What are you thinking about, all of a sudden. What makes you look like that?"

"I was thinking," she said, "that even if I did come here to live I couldn't bring all my trunks. You see, the little hat trunk that had all my father's papers in it was stolen while I was out at lunch today."

CHAPTER IX

Some Light and More Darkness.

SHE had expected that statement to startle him, but she'd seen nowhere near guessed what the force of the explosion would be. The utter disintegration of panic that his whole appearance betrayed would have been ludicrous if it had not been revolting. His face had gone a sickly shiny yellow. A door had opened and the man in the blue serge suit was in the room. "Yes, sir?" he said interrogatively.

"I didn't ring, Conley," Forster told him, without looking around. "Understand now, I shan't want you until I ring."

It was precisely the same phrase, Rhoda noted, that he'd used in dismissing the man the other time. It was no doubt a code order to station himself at some listening post where he could hear everything they said.

"What was it you were saying?" Forster asked. "That some trunk of yours had been stolen?"

"Yes," she said, "my hat trunk, while I was out at lunch. At least I think that's when it was. When I went back to the studio after lunch, about two o'clock, I found it gone."

"Went home after lunch, did you?" he asked, after a sharp look at her. "What kind of hours do you keep on your job?"

"I had this afternoon off," she told him. "I didn't go back to the paper at all."

"Well, then, he demanded, "how did you get my message that you were to come up here and see me?"

She hadn't foreseen the question, and her instinctively truthful answer was, "I didn't."

"Well," he persisted, "how did you know who I was or where I lived? What did you come here for?"

She smiled at him as she said, "It's rather complicated. I came here without having planned to, and I was surprised when I found you were expecting me. I didn't know anything about you until last night. Even then I hadn't decided to answer the advertisement. I didn't connect you with my father, you see, nor know that you'd been his friend. Well, last night I got a letter from a woman I'd never heard of before, asking me to lunch with her today. She said she'd known my father well and had something very important to talk to me about. I went to lunch with her to find out what it was. What she seemed interested in was my father's papers, whether he'd left any and whether I hadn't destroyed them. I told her I hadn't; I'd kept them all together in a trunk. She said she'd given him a letter to keep for her, and now she wanted it back. She suggested that I take her home with me—to my room, you know—and let her help me find it. I told her that that wasn't necessary, but that I'd find it for her if I could. When I said that, she excused herself from the lunch table to go out and telephone. When she came back she kept talking and ordering more food so that I couldn't get away. When I finally got away and went home, I found that the trunk with my father's papers in it was gone."

His little gimlet eyes had been boring right into her all the while she talked. Now, at her first pause, he barked out, "Who was this woman?"

"She told me," Rhoda answered, "that her name was Claire Cleveland."

A sudden suffusion of blood in his face turned it purple. He beat feebly but furiously upon his desk with a loosely clenched hand. "So you've joined up with that black-mailing woman, have you?" he said.

"I haven't joined up with her at all," Rhoda retorted. "I've just been telling you I think she stole my trunk. She talked to me about you quite a lot at lunch—after she'd come back from the telephone, that is. She said she'd seen your advertisement for me in the newspaper."

He pounced upon her here with a question. "My advertisement?"

"Come to That, How Did You Know Yourself?"

How did she know it was mine? It wasn't signed. Come to that, how did you know yourself?"

"A friend of mine on the paper found out for me," Rhoda said. "But I was wrong in saying that Claire knew. She said she thought it probably was you."

"Call her Claire, do you," he commented, "when you never saw her before today?"

This slip had rattled Rhoda. She'd been aware of it as it left her tongue. "She asked me to call her that," she explained, "and I did, though I hated to because I hated her. And the real reason I came to see you was because she urged me so strongly not to. I thought she must have some reason of her own for not wanting me to come. She said that you'd been the cause of all her trouble. She said you were a terrible person that broke in to get young girls."

He looked to her with an ugly laugh. "And on the strength of that you thought you'd come."

Rhoda felt her face burning and didn't know whether her voice would obey her or not, but she answered the sneer as if it had been a real question. "I thought she was lying. I didn't think you were like that. I'd seen you this morning when you took us to work in your car."

He dismissed that explanation with a mere snort of contempt. "Well, go on," he continued. "What else did she tell you?"

"She told me that you'd been in business, in a way, with my

Motorists Urged To Observe Caution Near School Zones

INVENTORS TO GET OPPORTUNITY TO DISPLAY WARES

Queen "Pat Pending" Contest Open to Everyone; To Have Two Maids.

Are there any embryo Thomas Edisons or Alexander Graham Bells living unnoticed in Niles or surrounding community? Perhaps there dwell within the confines of this locality those who have spent many weary hours in originating and perfecting devices and mechanisms which would bring fame and fortune to the inventor if only the capital necessary to get the invention before the public was available.

If such exist, they have been urged to get in touch with the California State Industries League in Oakland and send in their mechanical creations, for through this source all mechanisms will get attention and exhibit before the Pacific coast conference of the National Inventors' Congress to be held in Oakland on October 19 to 24.

Already all sorts of imaginable gadgets and devices have been sent in to be displayed before the congress. Mechanisms that tax the most fanciful of minds are numbered among the exhibits listed at present. A device that stops the engine and blows a horn for help in case of automobile accidents will be seen. A new suspensor button guaranteed not to tear is another. A brick that eliminates all odors from the icebox is the product of another mind.

Another feature of the congress which is arousing interest, is the queen, who will rule as "Queen Pat Pending." Any local girls who have queenly aspirations have been urged to enter the contest, which is open to everyone. The queen will have two maids of honor, "Miss Trademark," and "Miss Copyright."

JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE HAS NEW SECRETARY

John Ruppel Succeeds Lloyd H. Rhodes to Position

John Ruppel has succeeded Lloyd H. Rhodes as secretary of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, of Pleasanton, it was announced last week.

Rhodes, who was elected secretary when the organization started a little over a month ago, was forced to relinquish his post when his work called him to Niles. He has been manager of the Pleasanton Times, a Parks Publication, and due to the acquisition of another paper by Norman H. Parks, publisher, Rhodes was advanced to the management of the Niles newspaper.

Although the members of the chamber were sorry to see Rhodes leave Pleasanton, they all wish him success in his new position. They feel sure that they have an able successor to fill his office in the civic body in the person of Ruppel.

offer, and I want it understood that I am not attempting to bring the institution here if it is found that Centerville, Decoto, Hayward, or any other locality, is better suited for it."

Ford in offering the money, also wishes to make it clear that in boosting Niles for the location of the college he is not interested in the sale of property for the building site, his move being purely a philanthropic one.

The community of Niles owes a great deal to Mr. and Mrs. Ford for their support in civic improvements. Among the contributions to the community for which they are responsible are the Jane R. Clough memorial library, decidedly an asset to any town, and the headquarters of the Niles Boy Scouts. Some time ago Ford proposed to the local Chamber of Commerce that he would donate $100,000 to any industry providing all-the-year-round employment that the chamber would bring here.

"Inattention of motorists driving in school zones, coupled with carelessness of children in observing traffic, are the major causes of increased child fatalities during the period following the opening of schools in September," according to Mrs. J. R. Whipple, chairman of the Washington Township safety conference of the California State Chamber of Commerce.

"Safety habits formed during the school term are not very apt to be forgotten during the vacation period. While these habits are being re-learned, it is the responsibility of every motorist to observe added caution in the vicinity of schools.

"When an automobile driver sees a child in a place of danger or has reason to believe that it might run into a place of danger, it is his duty to exercise such care as would reasonably avoid a collision. No operator is safe to proceed upon the hypothesis that a child will probably take any certain course of action. To him, a child should be an object to be avoided and he should have his car under such control that he can accomplish this under any circumstances."

To protect the school children of California from the danger of traffic accidents, the safety conference is asking the cooperation of all motorists to drive with additional care in school zones, it was stated.

MODERN SYSTEM SET UP IN HIGH SCHOOL LIBRARY THIS WEEK

Study Hall Teacher Will Also Assume Duties of Librarian

An up-to-date library charging system has been installed at the library of the Amador Valley high school, Pleasanton, as a result of a large increase in the number of books installed there during the past few years.

The new system is similar to those used in the larger libraries. Each book will have a card and pocket. The date on which the book becomes due will be stamped on the book. The teacher in charge of the study hall will also act as librarian.
